

Russia's relations with Tanzania and Zambia

Russia was an early supporter of post-independence Tanzania and Zambia in the 1960s, as both aspired to implement a version of socialism. Recently, Russia has sought to rekindle these ties, in sectors such as education, military collaboration and nuclear power.

Yet many deals failed to materialise.

Zanzibar in Tanzania is a growing destination for Russian tourists. Both countries have sought debt relief from Russia, channeling funds towards development.
